Acknowledgments

This curriculum module was funded with support from the California Department of Social Services, Federal Title IV-E, the California Social Work Education Center, and the David and Lucile Packard Foundation.

We would like to express our deep gratitude to Nancy Dickinson and Sherrill Clark at Cal SWEC for their stewardship of the project. Thanks also to Pat Engelhard, Danna Fabella, and Bill Bettencourt, child welfare directors in Alameda, Contra Costa and San Francisco counties respectively, for their interest and participation in this study. This study was also completed with the support of the juvenile court judges in Alameda and San Francisco counties. We appreciate Judge Kurtz (Alameda) and Judge Hitchens (San Francisco) for their thoughtful review of our protocol and enthusiasm for learning about children’s perspectives in care.

Our project team benefited considerably from the assistance provided by our research advisory committee composed of CYC former foster youth, kin and non-kin caregivers, child welfare workers, and child welfare managers. These individuals include: Stuart Oppenheim, Charlotte Brinsont Brown, Donna DeAngelis, Sari Wade, Anissa Williams, Lillian Johnson, Thelma Huddleston, Gwen Smith, Joyce Richardson, Ann Walker, Joy Crumpton, Joy Warren, Carol Stevenson, Myeisha Grice, Linda Orrante, Pat Reynolds-Harris, Jean Burger, Charlene Welty, and Jeri Currey. We would also like to thank the California Youth Connection coordinators-Janet Knipe, Joy Warren, and Alfred Perez- for their collaboration in organizing our three focus groups with current and former foster youth. Inclusion of these adolescents’ perspectives made this curriculum a much richer resource for child welfare students, workers and educators.

The consent of participating children made this project a reality. Children’s overall openness in sharing their experiences that may have elicited strong emotions in them, was inspiring. Meanwhile, their caregivers’ consent in allowing strangers to enter their homes and conduct interviews with the children in their care, is a testament to their commitment to these children and to our shared goal of improving the quality of child welfare services. This commitment is deeply respected.

Finally, the contributions of several individuals were indispensable to this project: Barbara Needell was closely involved in this project from its inception and was committed to see it through. Her guidance and wisdom were invaluable, as was her work in the areas of sampling, instrumentation, and interviewer selection. We are also tremendously grateful to Bill Dawson for creating our automated data entry system; Ellen Krouss and Amy Penkin for their skillfully conducted interviews with children, leadership in administration of focus groups, and assistance with written pieces of this curriculum; John Pappas, whose computer formatting skills added substantially to the final product; and Susan Katzenellenbogen for her outstanding administrative support. Finally, we are very fortunate to have support from U.C. Berkeley School of Social Welfare administrators and staff, including Dean James Midgley, James Steele, and Judith Ambrose. Their enthusiasm for all of the research conducted at the center is invaluable.
